

Braemar at Wallkill Announces NYS Department of Health Approved Certifications for Home Health Aides

MIDDLETOWN, NY – October 30, 2017 – Braemar at Wallkill, a state-of-the-art assisted living residence and memory care center in Middletown, New York, is excited to announce its Home Health Aide Training Program. The program, which is administered by the facility’s licensed home health care agency, Hudson Valley Home Health Care (HVHHC), offers healthcare professionals the opportunity to earn their certification from the New York Department of Health as a Home Health Aide.

Braemar at Wallkill launched the certification program in order to provide consistent, high-quality training for professionals wishing to further their career in healthcare services. Graduates of the program will hold a state certification that is accepted at all NY-licensed facilities or Home Care Agencies. Braemar at Wallkill has offered positions to all of the program graduates so far who have applied for a position at its facility.

“We work hard to ensure our residents receive the highest quality of care possible, including those whose health situation requires more advanced care,” said Maryann Crenny, Director of Operations for FilBen Group, owner and operator of Braemar at Wallkill. “This certification through our home health care agency will enable more of our staff to provide that care at an enhanced level.”

Braemar at Wallkill has worked closely with the state to develop a curriculum and schedule that meets the demands of its students, as well as the needs of local seniors. The facility is currently certifying several of its employees as Home Health Aides through the program.

Crenny adds, “We’re excited to offer this course to our dedicated staff, and look forward to working with new quality healthcare professionals in the area.”

Those wishing to learn more about the course can contact Maryann Crenny at MCrenny@FilbenGroup.com or visit BraemarLiving.com.
